Student-facing overview

College search tools can help build a list, but students should verify programs, admission, cost, deadlines, and support on each institution's official website.

Learning target

I can use a current official source to choose and document one next step related to college search tools.

What to know

- Start with the student's program, location, affordability, support, and campus-experience priorities.
- Use federal comparison tools for consistent institutional data and treat rankings or reviews as secondary context.
- Data definitions and reporting years differ, so record the source and date for important comparisons.

Complete these steps

1. Name the student's five most important search criteria.
2. Use College Scorecard or College Navigator to identify possible institutions.
3. Open each institution's website to verify the exact program and application route.
4. Compare net price, support access, location, outcomes, and deadlines using consistent categories.
5. Save the evidence, unanswered questions, and next contact for each option.
